

University of Derby Intern develops into digital guru

University of Derby graduate Adam Thompson has secured a dynamic new web development role following a successful internship with leading Derby based design and communication agency threeguru.

"The Employer Engagement Team at the University of Derby has allowed us to work closely with a pool of talented and progressive students who have proved to be an asset to our team"

Lee Day, threeguru Digital & New Media Director

Programming graduate Adam has been working with threeguru for the past year and has become an integral part of their web development team.

Using his wide range of programming skills, Adam has developed an aptitude for web design during his time as an intern and is using his creativity and knowledge to the benefit of the gurus' web design client base.

Talking about the University of Derby's Internship Programme, threeguru Digital & New Media Director, Lee Day, said "The Employer Engagement Team at Derby University has allowed us to work closely with a pool of talented and progressive students who have proved to be an asset to our team".

Lee continued, "From an employer's point of view we have been able to throw projects at Adam to test how he responds and to see how he works within our team. This process has been incredibly beneficial and it is so important in our industry to have the finest creative and practical thinkers – We are delighted that Adam will be a permanent fixture at guru towers moving forwards".

Self-confessed video game fanatic Adam, said of the scheme "I'm extremely happy to be joining the Guru guys and for the chance to work in such a creative environment. The Pacman machine and pick n' mix bar are also an added bonus. I've loved my time at the University of Derby and being an intern has allowed me to expand my skills and start a career doing something that I love".